

EDITORIAL

Welcome to the tenth year of Quaker Studies. The journal, together with the Quaker Studies Research Association (QSRA) has continued to grow in academic reputation and participation and we are again running over our usual length in order to publish all the quality scholarship sent to us, and subsequently enhanced by the referees' comments and authors' care and creativity. This issue in particular contains some articles longer than usual, hence the reduction in number of papers.

Hilary Hinds, Jonathan Harlow, and Raymond Ayoub offer different kinds of reflections on the seventeenth century, whilst Bert Den Boggende and Brian Ward focus on twentieth century Quaker history. Nine book reviews complete the issue, reflecting the strength of this area of the academy at present.

Future issues will alternate between themed or semi-themed, often drawing on the fruits of QSRA conferences, and regular issues containing the wonderfully wide spread of topics within Quaker studies.

So, as we enter this tenth year, the journal is in a position of strength. We hope we maintain the quality readers have come to expect; whilst increased circulation and citation show the content continues to be salient and productive in furthering the academic study of Quakerism.
